

SOURCES OF RIP RAP, ARMOR OR REVETMENT STONE IN NY'S GREAT LAKES AREA

A revetment is a structure, usually of stone or concrete sections, built at, and parallel to, the toe of a bluff, embankment or scarp, at the front of a beach, or along a streambank parallel to the stream's flow. Revetments protect the shore against erosion from waves or flowing water. In New York's Great Lakes region, revetments are typically constructed of either limestone or dolomite (a magnesia-rich calcareous rock resembling limestone but generally more dense and wear-resistant than limestone). The following is a list of sources of these materials in NY's Great Lakes and Finger Lakes region.
